A Word from our CEO and Publisher - Anne Howard

It is an exciting time to be working in technology. Innovation is everywhere, and the world of public relations is not immune. In my time running a technology PR agency over the past two decades and working as a journalist, I’ve seen the industry change time and time again in response to the latest and greatest social, mobile, and cloud disruptions. We’ve come a long way from the press release, haven’t we? That is why I am thrilled to publish The Scope Weekly, a newsmagazine dedicated to sharing real, quality news that people will want to read: created by you and about your news.
The Transforming Publishing World

The publishing world and PR have undergone several transformations over the past century, and they are continuing to change more every year as newer technologies disrupt traditional models. In simpler times, businesses or organizations desiring to establish open communication with the media and the public would write up a press release, which could discuss a new service, promote a new event, or announce just about anything.

Today, however, social and mobile technologies have transformed the news landscape. In the same way that individuals across the globe have been empowered by the ability to broadcast and communicate with their peers through services like Facebook and Snapchat, companies too have been gifted the opportunity to establish open lines of communication with their audience. Indeed, today’s consumer expects an open and transparent view into the organizations they choose to work with and purchase services.

With all these changes, there’s one thing that has remained the same: coverage of your news by credible sources is invaluable to reinforcing the way your brand is perceived. Press releases, representative of the relationship between business and press, isn’t going away anytime soon.
A New Approach

Traditional newswires don’t care what comes across their desk and newsmagazines are inundated with worthless pitches. Whether it is an incredible announcement like Apple unveiling a spaceship for intergalactic travel or something as mundane as some random Joe announcing his garage sale this Saturday, newswires just want quantity. The more press releases a newswire receives, the more money they make, while a newsmagazine worth is only as good as its news and its power to attract readers.

No one would ever subscribe to an online newswire because most of what it publishes is just noise. But that is misguided. When it comes down to it, there’s only one thing that matters in the publishing world: being newsworthy! Publish at The Scope Weekly and see how other news outlets take notice. Media loves media.

That is why we are taking a different approach with The Scope Weekly and one that shouldn’t sound so farfetched. In short, we are looking for quality material. Legitimate news, instead of boring press releases and fluff.

On The Scope Weekly, you’ll find great editorial content published by writers who want to make a name for themselves. The site also features rich content, including infographics, videos from YouTube and Vimeo, podcasts, and more. Yes, your businesses will be able to buy advertising and submit sponsored articles, but the best businesses will tap into the richness of new forms of content to deliver their newsworthy announcements.
The Scope Weekly Solution

While newswires are stuck in a dull PR past and most magazines won't give your enterprise and project the time of the day, The Scope Weekly embraces new technology and recognizes that news tips and story ideas come from all kinds of sources. The polished magazine aesthetic of Scope Weekly lends itself perfectly to a beautiful photo, an eye-opening infographic, or a dynamic video--any of these may serve better than a press release in earning your organization positive exposure.

Publish your story on Scope Weekly and then share across Facebook, Instagram, Twitter, and YouTube.

And this isn't just for Startup. Scope Weekly has experience supporting major public relations campaigns operated by some of the biggest companies in the world.

Here are some solutions we offer:

Traditional newsmagazines where the readers just read are a thing of the past. That's where we come in. The Scope Weekly newsmagazine offers so much MORE. That is, we'll accept news stories announcements in various formats and forms: Video, infographics, and article, soon podcast and will publish them on our business newsmagazine. We also write our stories.
